

Robert Lowell: Seasons of the Mind

Season of the Mind Robert Lowell's poem Skunk Hour is filled with various themes of loneliness, insanity, depression and isolation. This paper selects themes of loneliness and insanity and shows how Lowell created an atmosphere of loneliness and isolation by using figurative and symbol in Skunk Hour. The seasons ill (Lowell 13) refers to the exterior season of Nautilus island, but also the interior season of the author. In this sense season stands for something other than itself and can be seen as personification where the season is reflected in the mind of the writer. A season is a time, period or term. In the Skunk Hour season is used in several senses. First, season refers to the actual time the author experiences Nautilus Island where the heiress still lives thru winter in her Spartan cottage (Lowell 2) and A red fox stain covers Blue Hill (Lowell 17). The fox stain refers to the Autumn leaves falling on Blue Hill. Secondly, season refers to the interior mind of the narrator. The writer speaks of loss (Lowell 13), fairy/decorator (Lowell 19-20), dark night (Lowell 25), graveyard shelves (Lowell 29), and I myself am hell;/nobodys here (Lowell 35-36).
